The judge, Niclas Parry, said prison would be the only option for punishment.

He said: "For no reason other than greed, you have betrayed your own community.

"Born and bred there, knowing there are decent people trying to make the best of things, you contributed to the misery by dealing drugs.

"You were callous enough to be dealing in broad daylight, next to a children's play park no less. It went on for over six months.

"It was so profitable that even after arrests, you knew you had been caught but you carried on doing exactly the same thing again."

He passed a combined sentence of more than 12 years for the siblings.
